Ending violence against women in rural areas

Context
The Inter-American Network of Organizations of Rural Women (CONAMURI) is the only national umbrella organization which unites several indigenous and rural women organizations from different provinces across Paraguay. CONAMURI advocates rural women's human and women's rights in the fields of rural and urban violence against women, rural and indigenous women's political participation and access. This results in CONAMURI's commitment to rural and indigenous women's political participation.

CONAMURI advocates for language “Stop Violence against Women in Rural Areas” together with the Comisión Latinoamericana de Organización del Trabajo (CLAT) and the Federación Latinoamericana de Organizaciones de Mujeres (FLAM). The Inter-American Network of Organizations of Rural Women (CONAMURI) is a member of both organizations. The campaign is supported by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACtHR).

CONAMURI and its partners also offer guidance on how to best promote women's rights in rural areas. This is done through a series of activities and campaigns that aim to raise awareness and demand for the systematic inclusion of the perspective of rural women in the agenda of women's organizations.

The goal is to create a network of rural women's organizations across the region of Latin America, with the aim of addressing their specific needs and demands for the inclusion of women's perspectives in the agenda of women's organizations.

CONAMURI has also been working with the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACtHR) to demand the inclusion of women's perspectives in the agenda of women's organizations.
